State Farmers Meeting In City

Barn Bureau Wants U. S. To Pay-As-You-Go

Program for the Kentucky Farm Bureau's annual meeting, under way in Louisville Monday, was the very first since President Llewellyn H. Bowen, Green, advocated a pay-as-you-go financing plan in the struggle against communism.

Allen committed the farmers in a willingness to do their part in meeting the challenge, and said that Americans should call on the Government to "cut unnecessary spending to the very minimum."

Declaring that the national Farm Bureau Federation has worked to defeat dangerous social legislation in Washington, the farm leader pointed out that the Bureau is recognized there as "the voice of the farmers."

Nation Is Urged To Guard Liberty, Prevent Inflation

Maximum production, economic expansion and the prevention of inflation are the major basic objectives which the nation must strive to achieve in the "garrison state" years we now face, Claude A. Putnam, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, declared in a recent speech.

Outlining measures which must be taken to maintain a strong economy and preserve individual freedom, Putnam said industry does not seek nationwide "no-strike" agreements but relies upon good-faith collective bargaining as the best means of assuring uninterrupted defense production.

The N.A.M. president warned against both the hoarding and the inefficient utilization of manpower, and said best results in use of manpower will come from voluntary co-operation between State and Federal governments in operation of the employment service, so that the nation retain the greatest possible degree of initiative.

Free Labor Needed

"American industry knows the record proves that the most productive labor is free labor," Putnam continued. "Industry does not seek nationwide 'no-strike' agreements. It relies on good-faith collective bargaining under the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947."

"Maximum production is our

Responsibilities Listed

During these years of conversion from a peacetime economy to a defense economy, the N.A.M. president said, American business has these three major responsibilities:

1. To do all in its power to help toward the nation.
2. To do all in its power to preserve the individual freedoms and incentives that make our economy strong and productive.
3. To do all in its power to prevent the dollar from suffering further depreciation in value.

These objectives can be accomplished if we manage our productive forces in the most efficient manner possible, Putnam declared, but added that "the danger is that we will not—or will be allowed to—

Santa To Present Photo To County Children

When Santa Claus arrives at Standford Airfield, Sunday afternoon, December 3, he will have with him an autographed photograph for every child present.

This information was received this week from the old saint who is still struggling through great snow drifts and terrible blizzards to arrive in Jefferson County on time.

And the Jefferson County Playground and Recreation Board also heard from the beautiful Santa Claus who has reached the rim of the great Antarctic ice pack and is waiting for his helicopter to carry her to Santiago, Chile, where she will take another plane to Miami, Fla. At Miami she will board the Eastern Airlines special that will bring her to Jefferson County.

"Tell all these wonderful children in Jefferson County," radioed Mrs. Claus, "that I can hardly wait to see them. Down here it is 50 degrees below zero, and a cold wind is blowing all the time. It will feel good to get back to Kentucky where it is so much warmer."

According to Charlie Vetter, director of county recreation, the Santa Claus Committee, headed by Gov. Lawrence Wetherby, is working very hard to provide the greatest reception ever given the old saint.

"We are going to have a big band, furnished by the local Musicians Union," said Vetter. "And the Mill Creek Drum and Bugle Corps will be there, too. There will be a program of stunts and singing to provide entertainment for the crowd while they await the arrival of the planes."

So Santa Claus and Mrs. Claus will be expected all day of all ages at Standford Field, at 2 o'clock, Sunday afternoon, December 3.

WE TAKE A BACKWARD GLANCE

This country of ours is young, comparatively; like this writer who is not as old as, some at least, of our contemporaries. We have seen a lot of changes in our young country. Young America got a late start in the world's history, but, under the free enterprise system, she has overtaken every other country, every other national system in growth.

We can remember when men used to work on the railroad section hands, ten hours a day, for a dollar and fifteen cents. We can remember when skilled printers worked for seven and eight dollars a week, and the top wages for the foreman of the office was fifteen dollars a week. Farm hands received from fifteen to twenty dollars a month and good school teachers thirty dollars a month. And not forgetful of our own boyhood economics, we recall working a six-day week and drawing the munificent sum of three dollars, no more, no less. You could get a home, you know. Suppose we should have had to pay a boy.

Three or four-room houses rented for five, six or seven dollars a month. Incidentally, there were a lot of families who lived in three or four-room houses, splendid people who were well educated, well to do, but they were not able to afford six and eight-room houses with all that went with them.

Of course, in those days food and clothing was cheaper. There were no movies, no radio, no television, no automobiles, no talking machines. The better-to-do families had a horse and buggy. Nearly every family had at least one cow, and those who did not bought their milk from those who did, at five cents a quart, or even cheaper. The quarts were most generous too. You could get a half-gallon bucket to a farm house and get it nearly full for a nickel, whole milk.

Food and clothing were correspondingly cheap, but it took the same close figuring to make ends meet as it does today. Marvelous it was that many of these families of from four to ten children ever made it. But they did. Life was limited to essentials, and there was usually enough to go around.

Enough of this for this time: musing in the past. Readers will think that they have gotten over into Fred Ballard's "40 Years Ago" column.

New things of potentially far-reaching influence on the American people are coming from time to time through inventive development, bringing new problems to American homes. Just now, the country is adjusting itself to that marvelous invention called television. Miss Elise Weibel, principal of Louisville's John B. McFerran School, speaking to the school's P-T-A. last week, pointed out some of the effects television is having on the city's educational system, as reflected in a section of the student body. Too much, particularly of certain programs, of television is not conducive to educational development of youth. A new challenge is presented to parental responsibility.

The failure of parents to teach discipline in the home is an injustice to the children. Discipline is just as important to a young man as a young woman as is grammar, arithmetic or the social graces. It has to be learned, sooner or later. There is no escape from it. It merely postpones the learning of it until a time when the learning will be much more difficult.

One of the difficult things to understand is that, very often, when a man has proven himself a failure in everything else he gets into politics. Because he happens to be, perhaps, a good vote getter and a good organizer, he is once in a while called upon to pass laws for the regulation and conduct of business that he doesn't know the first thing about, and which would go broke under his own management.

We have lived long enough and seen enough to know that a lot of the big boys at the top of things aren't any smarter than the little fellows in the smaller places in life who don't get much of an opportunity to make the front page, but are nevertheless doing relatively a lot better job of business management. The big boys usually have a "nerve" which must be admitted goes a long way—but it isn't everything it takes.

Every community has a number of idle, or partially idle, people, who either through fortunate circumstances or desire never seem to have anything to do. They have worlds of time for community work, yet when it comes to lending a hand to put over a community project they are not available.

It is a great and heartening thing to have the conviction that God gives to every person strength sufficient to bear his every trial if he will but meet them as they come from day to day. Man should put yesterday's troubles behind him and meet today's troubles with trust and tomorrow's troubles with faith.

Remember back when the experts were setting the limit to which this government could go in debt at $45 billion? The fact that we have exceeded that limit shows that our's is a great country, and strong. But it does not mean that there is no limit.

No matter how high the cost of living goes, most of us are going to try to keep on living.

All of the progress that the race has made must be credited to the doers, not merely to the "do-gooders."

A mismanaged life is worse than a mismanaged business; both are disastrous.

Profanity is the least convincing form of emphasis.

They tell us: that our federal government has spent, since last July 1, $13 billion, and we now owe about $257,000,000,000.

Sparks and Willies

By Samuel H. Smart

The first impression I can recall of a farmer was when I was about five years old, when I went to a farm with my father. I was with him when he was showing the Preacher (my father) over his beautiful prairie farmstead, and I was along—not counting on meeting up with those terrifying hog-

All told, the experience was a pleasant one, however, for the farmer had a nice son, Zello, with whom Sister and I played and in the evening we went home with the memory of a lovely day in the country, plus some more solid evidences under the buggy seat.

Although not a great while ago, that was the ideal period in the history of farming in America. The farmer was a happy man, and he and his family were well off in the evening we went home with the memory of a lovely day in the country, plus some more solid evidences under the buggy seat.

The results were particularly impressive in communities where Christian people were mobilized, organized, and adequately informed. While the "double-talk" and leftist hypocrisy indulged in by too many candidates, so confused thousands of voters that they stayed away.

Inexhaustible as it seems, city farm products are available at the same easy-going occupation it was in the comfortable epoch when I was a boy. The farmer and his family were well off in the evening we went home with the memory of a lovely day in the country, plus some more solid evidences under the buggy seat.

Listen, Citizen!

By RALPH SEARLE, Executive Secretary, Kentucky Christian Citizenship Council, Inc.

From the polls, a surprisingly large number of them registered their convictions, and that with little or no attention to party line. Such was the case in Louisville and Jefferson County, Ky. instance.

In many sections of the country, big and correspondingly corrupt politicians are being severely jolted. In a number of widely separated localities, they are being ousted from office. The campaign slogan as the Christian forces girded for the election. In New York and Chicago, in Massachusetts, Montana and California, to mention only a few, impressive victories were won by the campaigns of civic righteousness and public morality.

During the coming year the Christian citizens of Kentucky will face an unusual opportunity and challenge to "stand up and be counted." We as a governor and a legislature to be elected, together with public officials in all counties and municipalities, it behooves the Christian "civic leaders in every community to be on the lookout for men and women of proven integrity and ability, and to encourage them to become candidates, even though it involves some personal sacrifice. The one way to make democracy really work is to make democracy Christian. The one way to make democracy Christian is to elect, then elect, Christian public officials. Let's get busy!

Pastor At St. John Is Recuparating At Home

The pastor at St. John Lutheran Church, Rev. Samuel P. Diehl, is now recuperating at home. Rev. Diehl underwent a serious operation at the Baptist Hospital November 2. His condition was reported as satisfactory but he spent several days at the hospital recovering.

He returned home last Sunday and expects to take up his duties approximately the first Sunday in December.

Felt Toys To Make

CHRISTMAS toys are inexpensive if you make them yourself. Here are two small playthings made of felt pieces which can be whipped together in a jiffy. The white swan is a soft toy for baby to cuddle. Brown bunny is a bean bag with long cotton-stuffed ears and embroidered features. Want to play "catch"? A direction leaflet for making FELT TOYS will be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Needlework Department of this paper, requesting Leaflet No. E-570.

HOMEMAKER CLUBS

WRIGHT VIEW
Refinishing furniture is the subject of the day with all the Jefferson County Homemakers Clubs. It is a new project. Our leaders, Mrs. Paul Stine and Mrs. C. L. Timmons, gave a very interesting lesson, the second, on how to repair the piece before the new finish is put on, how to glue the rungs of a chair, fill in nicked out pieces, to take out dents with a moist piece of wool and hot iron, take white spots out of the wood. It is wonderful what you can do with old, worn broken-down furniture. When finished you are repaid for all your hard work by a piece of better furniture than you had.

We had 17 members present. Three were absent on account of illness. Mrs. Joe Blaser, who is one of our state members, is at St. Anthony's Hospital where she had an operation last week. Mrs. Burnett is ill with a cold and Mrs. Schobe has illness in her family.

We collected money for the Old Folks Home, the November Lodge to help with their Christmas tree.

Some brought clothing to be seen in a poor family.

We also made plans to fix a Christmas basket for a needy family.

We made plans to serve lunch at the R. W. Eisenmenger sale on Locust Lane. We made plans for our Christmas party and dinner and set our club day up one week. We will meet December at Mrs. Charles Stine, on Preston Highway. One of our members, Mrs. Paul Stine, is leaving for Florida the next week.

We met this morning, November 8, with Mrs. Cartwright, of High View. All the lessons were given, and a special lesson on Christmas decorations by Mrs. Norma Fisher and Mrs. Jane Magee will be given. After the regular meeting the Homemakers will have their auction. Articles of home and various selections will be auctioned off. These articles are furnished by members.

Everyone is welcome! Bring a friend—Mrs. Carey E. Baker, Publicity Chairman.

MIDDLETOWN
The second lesson on "Refinishing Furniture" was given the Middletown Homemakers Club by Mrs. J. O. Matlock and Mrs. Monty. Two chairs were used as examples and the members saw the actual work being done, step by step.

At the December meeting the major project will be landscaping and a special lesson on Christmas decorations by Mrs. Norma Fisher and Mrs. Jane Magee will be given. After the regular meeting the Homemakers will have their auction. Articles of home and various selections will be auctioned off. These articles are furnished by members.

Everyone is welcome! Bring a friend—Mrs. Carey E. Baker, Publicity Chairman.

STRATHMOOR
The Strathmoor Homemakers Club met October 9 with Mrs. O. J. Meyer on Lowe Road. The major project lesson, "Refinishing Furniture," was given by Mrs. Craggs and Mrs. Zehnder.

The landscape leader took orders for magnolia and pink dogwood trees. On November 13 members learned more about refinishing and sanding furniture, how to remove dark spots, dents and bruises, filling small holes and staining furniture, demonstrated by Mrs. Craggs and Mrs. Zehnder.

The club met with Mrs. Hurst, Brighton Drive with 21 members present. After lunch business was conducted by our president, Mrs. Schneider. Pennies were collected for the Old Folks Home, Christmas treat. The club discussed sending a delegate to the Farm and Home Hour to be held in Lexington in January.

Landscape lesson was given by Mrs. Deibel, and citizenship by Mrs. Roby.

Mrs. O. Cooksey was welcomed into the club as a new member. Next meeting will be with Mrs. Schneider on Peale Road. Girls, this is our Christmas party—Mrs. W. H. Fay, Publicity Chairman.

Jest Among Us ...

By Jack Wm

Have you ever wondered, as I have, who this person Dix was for whom our Kentucky river was named? Dr. Tom Clark, head of the University of Kentucky history department, tells something about him in his book, "History of Kentucky." It seems that a group of 40 North Carolina "Long Hunters," so called because of their long stay in the Kentucky wilderness back in the 1770's, established a semi-permanent camp in the neighborhood of what is now Monticello, in Wayne County. Some of the men were killed by Indians, others returned home, and at last only nine of the hunters were left under the leadership of James Knox.

"While hunting one day," Dr. Clark relates, "they encountered a band of Cherokees led by a crippled chieftain to whom the whites gave the name 'Captain Dick.' Pleased with his new name, 'Captain Dick' led the whites to his (Dick's) river and bade them hunt at will. Thus the Dix River was named."

THOUGHTS AND THINGS—
Geologists say the climate of Western Kentucky is "mesothermal humid subtropical," which means, I suppose, that on occasion it gets all fired hot down that way. . . . My daughter, Rae, a sixth-grader, came in from school last week and reported that they were studying a new kind of arithmetic—"algebra." . . . The national debt is $27,000,000,000, but there's naught in that to worry about.

Bus drivers have to put up with a lot from angry passengers. The other night I was out on a "scavenger hunt" with the preacher, and one of the items on our list was a bus transfer. We drove up alongside a city bus and I hopped aboard. I gave the driver a dime and the driver gave me a bus token and a penny change. I asked him for a transfer, which he refused to give me. Then I said, "I'd like off again," and he said, "What did you say?" I said, "Please let me off," and he looked at me like I was crazy. He opened the door in a hurry and he let me off. I got the impression that he was not sorry to see me go. When the scavenger hunt was over and I went home, I discovered that in the excitement I'd dropped the penny in the token box and the bus token in my pocket.

Honkers Will Clean Strawberry Patches

Many Jefferson County strawberry growers will be using geese in their berry patches next year, believes H. C. Brown, associate county agent. He bases his prediction on the interest shown in demonstrations by two local farmers.

L. L. Porter, who finished setting out seven and a half acres in the middle of April, says he would have been "lost in crabgrass" had it not been for his 19 geese. Fencing his berry field, he turned in the geese in early May. Then he fed about three-penny of shell corn each day to balance the grass ration, and provided a low shade shelter and pond at one end of the field. Mr. Porter figures he made a saving of 60 to 75 per cent over hand labor for hoeing and weeding.

J. W. Fegenbush, who has a new patch of two and a half acres, estimates that he saved 50 per cent over hand labor by using seven geese in his field. A greater saving could have been made had he turned in the geese earlier, he stated.

BLUEGRASS FOR CATTLE
Jesse Stuart, the Greenup County agent, listened two years ago to a lecture on seven pastures and cattle raising, sowed grass on some of his 100 acres of mountain and slopes, bought a good-sized herd of steers (against the advice of older farmers), sold them in the fall at a good profit, then fattened the story and sold it to Collier's Weekly for a thousand bucks.

Few farmers can double up on cattle profits the way Stuart did, but also there are few farmers in Kentucky who couldn't do better with more grass than they now have.

For a couple of years Harry W. Schacter, president of the Committee for Kentucky, introduced me at public dinners as the owner of the biggest documentary photograph agency in the country and a hog raiser who provided electric heat for little pigs in cold weather. Eventually Schacter's little eugy got a bit stale.

"Harry," I said to him one day, "why don't you let dinner crowds I'm the guy who put bluegrass in west Kentucky? That would mean something to Kentuckians. They don't care a darn about my business in New York."

Saying our correspondent put bluegrass in west Kentucky really would have been piling it on rather heavily. Few counties in my end of the state were without bluegrass when I sowed my first field 14 years ago. Henderson County had one bluegrass pasture that was 20 years old, and it is still the best in the county.

Smith Broadbent, Trigg County, has 300 acres of bluegrass. Runs hundreds of steers on it while feeding them grain. He and Smith Jr., market thousands of corn-fed steers in a year. William B. Wolfe, Henderson County, second largest feeder in west Kentucky, also runs steers on bluegrass while feeding them corn.

Right now we are topdressing bluegrass with chemical fertilizer—400 pounds of 0-12-12 to the acre. That is half potash, half acid phosphate. I had been really smart I would have done this four years ago.

Three youths going at a lively clip turned into a side road without slowing down quite enough and rammed another car head-on. All three in the first car were badly hurt, one of them almost fatally. A colored boy in the parked car was painfully hurt. Both cars went up in flames. Casualty insurance? None on either car. The car carrying the white boys, bought on credit, was covered by collision insurance, naturally. Which served to bring your attention to a phony insurance law enacted by that august legislative body officially known as the General Assembly.

When the law was passed the public was made to believe it really meant something, the result of which was a harvest of casualty policies. The casualty business thrives on phony laws. The truth about the statute became rather widely known.

What the "compulsory" law really means is that if the owner of an uninsured car is adjudged by a civil court to be liable for death, physical injury or property damage and has no means within reach of the law he or she may be forbidden a driver's license until the judgment is settled. That means irresponsible motorists must have some means of insurance or face the loss of their license. That means that their victims have no recourse at all. The enactment of the disgraceful statute must have been a cheap ploy. The members of the legislature must have feared antagonizing owners of "smashable" jalopies. Also a good many dealers.

The next General Assembly ought to repeal the dishonest statute and pass a law with teeth in it. Nobody should be granted a car license without casualty insurance amounting to $20,000. Under no circumstance should the minimum be less than $10,000. Nobody should be allowed to own a car unless he provides protection for people he may injure.

Let's get rid of our dishonest liability law and substitute an honest one. This is something for holdover state senators and prospective candidates to do in the next legislature to begin thinking about, not to mention a couple of hundred newspaper editors in Kentucky who can get a good insurance law if they will take the trouble to demand it.

HARDWARE STORE

It becomes easy, as we get used to things, to accept them for granted. Take your home-town hardwareman for example. Probably he's been serving your community—and serving it well—for a long time. Maybe you've grown so used to his store that you take it for granted. But what if it wasn't there and you found it hard to get essential items of hardware and housewares so quickly, so easily and so fairly priced? You'll surely agree such a condition would be your loss—the community's loss!

So give a thought to your local hardware retailer—the thousand-and-one needed things he stores. Think of the almost countless services he renders. Consider these things and you will understand why it pays to do business with stores displaying the red, white and blue irha Symbol of Service and Satisfaction.

Your Thanksgiving bird — no matter what form it took on your table, let there be interesting "planned-over" meals to follow. Your bird may have been the traditional turkey or roast chicken — or you may have been more conservative with roast of pork, perhaps you settled for braised turkey legs. At any rate, there is doubtless some of that tasty meat left for interesting meals left to come.

Planned-over meals accepted — so much more interesting for the family are they, and satisfying to the cook who plans to make the planned-over food attractive as it comes to the table for a second serving.

Individual Turkey Parties — make them as suggested by Florence Inlay — they'll win the acceptance of your family. For four servings, you'll need 6 tablespoons butter, 4 tablespoons flour, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 cup turkey or chicken broth or gravy, 1 cup milk, 1/4 cups cooked peas, 2 tablespoons pimiento or green pepper, 2 cups cooked meat (turkey, chicken, or pork), 1/4 cup mushrooms. Melt butter in sauce pan. Stir in flour and salt, then gradually add broth and milk, stirring until thickened. Add peas, pimiento, turkey or chicken and mushrooms. Heat thoroughly. Stir in four individual baking dishes or a casserole. Top with pastry. Bake at 350° for 45 minutes, or for about 20 minutes.

For the pastry — Sift together 1 1/2 cups flour, 1/2 teaspoon salt. Cut in 1/4 cup shortening. Sprinkle with about 3 tablespoons cold water and mix lightly until dough begins to stick together. Roll as piecrust and place on the turkey mixture. Or the pastry cut in shapes (diamonds, circles, crescents) may be baked separately, then placed on the casserole and come from the oven, ready for the table. This last method insures crisp, flaky crust you may prefer.

The rest of the menu — with the meat pasties you may serve buttered carrots, apple-raisin salad, cornbread and butter, butterscotch pudding.

Jefferson Farmer's Have Soil-Saving Programs

Seven Jefferson County co-operating farmers in the local soil conservation district used the district bulldozer during October, according to Roy L. Roman of the U. S. Soil Conservation Service.

Several farmers along Floyd's Fork were using the service in an effort to prevent further damage to their farm land by high water.

Low places along the banks of the creek were filled to prevent water from breaking through, the channel of the stream was opened up and debris built up in other places. Among those taking part in the conservation program are, Farmer Brown, Sam Alloway and others, these owners paying for the work done along the boundaries of their farms.

Making use of the same equipment, drainage work was done on the farm of R. F. Wheeler, Nachand Lane. Also on the farm of B. F. Boyer, Aiken Road, who is reclaiming several acres of his land by clearing, filling and leveling gullies so that a moving machine can be used when the pastures are established.

Farmers in this area wanting help in making a complete soil and water conservation plan can obtain this assistance without cost by contacting the Jefferson County Soil Conservation District, 401 Fiscal Court Building, Louisville, Ky.

Fall Plowing Of Leaf Beds Urged

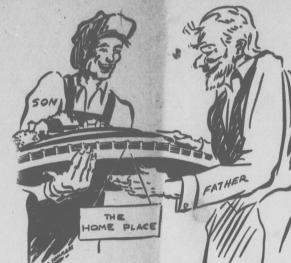

Preparation of tobacco plant beds in the fall is suggested by Russell Hunt of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics, University of Kentucky.

Especially should beds be plowed in the fall, he said, so as to destroy roots of grasses, clovers, and weeds on which the bacteria of the wildfire disease live through the winter. When these roots are killed the disease germs die and the chance for wildfire in plant beds are materially reduced.

Best results are obtained when beds are plowed and burned, steamed or treated with methyl cyanide in the fall, according to Hunt.

A survey made last spring showed that beds plowed and treated in the fall to control weeds were free from wildfire. This was especially true where beds were ditched to keep water from flowing over them in winter, carrying wildfire bacteria back on them.

Hunt suggested that plant beds sites be located on sloping ground, so water could be ditched around them. Plants develop earlier where beds slope to the south or southeast, he said.

Farmers See How Timber Pays Off

Farmers from several counties saw what good management of woods can do, when they attended meetings at the Rev. H. C. Moxley and I. C. Gaddery farms in Russell County.

The results of 30 years of good management, including protection from fire, are now being turned into cash by Rev. Moxley. The past year he sold 62,000 board feet from 16 acres. Only mature and damaged trees were cut.

Wilson J. Mitchell, Taylor County assistant in forestry, estimated that rot and decay, due to fires years ago, caused a loss of at least 4,000 board feet of some of the best timber. Fires also robbed the soil of its fertility and slowed up the growth of the trees, he added.

The sound and better growing trees in the Moxley woods, some which were 20 inches in diameter, were left to grow another crop of timber. Protection from fire and control of grazing should shorten the time required to mature the timber, according to Mitchell.

Timber in the Gaddery woods was cut three years ago. Cutting included yellow poplar, red oak, white oak, ash, and sugar maple. There have been no fires or grazing since the cutting. Yellow poplar, seeded in the openings where the trees were cut, is now as general as 12 feet tall. Tree growth in general has been more rapid since the cutting three years ago, it was observed.

The Moxley woodland was estimated to be growing at the rate of 200 board feet an acre a year and the Gaddery woods at the rate of 167 board feet an acre.

Report Shows How Farmers Save Soil

Rebuilding and conserving Kentucky soil is going forward on a tremendous scale, according to figures in the annual report of the director of agricultural extension, College of Agriculture and Home Economics, University of Kentucky.

Extension agricultural engineers assisted county agents in 70 counties in training leaders in water management. As a result, 10,670 farmers practiced contour cultivation, 1,312 built terraces, 1,676 made drainage improvements, 1,490 cleared land for pasture improvement, 6,926 made reservoirs, and 6,304 filled gullies and seeded them to grass and legumes to control erosion.

For constructing farm reservoirs, clearing and leveling land, terracing, ditching and farm road construction, there are over 400 custom operators in Kentucky, each owning one to eight tractor-trailer units with bulldozers and many with pans, graders, disk plows, and root rakes. A total of 668 operators, farmers, and others attended 12 leader-training schools in different sections of the state, held to promote the construction of bigger and better reservoirs.

Emphasis was placed upon the importance of planning the farm in relation to the type of work needed to be done with power equipment. In most cases it was best to hire custom operators equipped with the proper machinery and to plan the development of the farm so that a certain amount of work could be done each year until the soil and water management program was completed.

During the year 88 farmers reported irrigation programs. Extension engineers assisted them with plans for portable pipe irrigation systems and designed six irrigation systems for state institutional farm gardens covering 235 acres. The estimated cost of equipment was $83 per acre.

SHORTHORN STEER WINS FAT CATTLE SHOW

Bescon's Pride, a 17-month-old calf, caused his owner to take a lot of pride in him at the Louisville Fat Cattle Show last Thursday.

The calf, owned by Kenneth Reed, of Midway, was selected as the Grand Champion of the show. Bescon's Pride is a Shorthorn, the first to win the championship in 25 years.

Water For Modern Needs: Immense Volume Required

Water, quite distinct from its place as number-one necessity in human, animal, and plant life, has come to play an increasingly important role in modern industry, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

George D. Clyde of the Soil Conservation Service points out several striking examples of water requirements in industrial production.

A large paper mill will use 50 million gallons of water a day, enough to supply a city of 500,000 people.

It takes from 600 to 1,000 tons of water for each ton of coal burned in a steam-generating plant.

Production of a ton of steel calls for use of 65,000 gallons of water, and a ton of rubber about 18,000 gallons.

Each gallon of aviation gasoline requires about 25 gallons of water to produce.

Primitive human life, and plant and animal life under natural conditions require adequate water supplies, but "civilization" involves a great increase in the allowance for humans. Clyde points to sanitary sewers, modern plumbing, spinner-type washing machines, and air-conditioning equipment as examples of modern developments that "have greatly increased the use of water by the human family."

A bigger turnout of livestock, many exhibits from states never before represented here, is promised for the International Live Stock Exposition which opens November 25 at the eight-day run through December 2 in the Chicago Stock Yards.

Carlots entries which do not close until November 15, should bring the total number of livestock to beyond the 10,000 mark of last year's International, according to the management. Exhibits in livestock alone will come from 35 states and two Canadian provinces, a record number.

Most notable fact about the entries this year are the numerous names appearing on the exhibitor list for the first time.

U.K. Student Makes Paper From Stalks

A University of Kentucky student, Arthur J. Razor, of Georgetown, has found a new use for tobacco stalks. Using his wife's kitchen as a laboratory, Razor this week announced that he has produced from ordinary tobacco stalks a tough, fibrous quality of paper that probably can be adapted to many uses.

The ex-G.T. turned inventor was graduated from the U.K. College of Education last June. He currently is working toward a masters degree in library science.

Palmer Bradley took what he thought was to be an enjoyable trip to Ashland to visit a friend for the week end. The results were decidedly the opposite, for he was involved in an automobile accident almost as soon as he arrived in Ashland. His car was pretty badly damaged, so I hear, and so was his face. He was taken to the hospital and at the last report, was expected to be brought home in a few days. I don't imagine he will enjoy company for awhile, as his jaw was broken and is wired up, so conversation would be a matter of no account.

It seems to me that this column is always full of the doings of the Women's Council of the Christian Church, but then, they are always doing something interesting to write about, and that is news. In preparation for the big chicken dinner for last Saturday night, they gave a party for the members of the church. The party was held on Thursday night, and believe me, it rained gifts. Several pounds and three ounces. Congratulations! Mother and baby are doing fine.

Deep sympathy is extended to the family of Mrs. Lina C. Bruce, who departed this life last Wednesday morning. It is sad indeed that God doeth all things well and he saw fit to pluck this flower from our midst.

U.N. Fights Disease in Korea

To avoid the threat of epidemics the United Nations is carrying out a mass inoculation campaign in Korea. The WACS has an interesting and enjoyable service at the Methodist Church last week. The Mt. Holly group came with a lovely decorated and very delicious cake as their birthday visit with us. We failed to get the exact number but there was a goodly crowd and added to our own it was a congregation to be proud of. Our subject was on rural health and Dr. W. M. Rush, Fern Creek, was our speaker. As usual his remarks were informative, and helpful, interspersed with humor and pathos. Our own society received three new members, Mrs. H. J. Jones, Mrs. Samuel Blackburn, and Mrs. Ben Miller; the latter of Shepherds and was welcomed.

Our next meeting will be December 8 instead of our regular date; on that day Miss Ruth Falk will be with all day to present a mission study book.

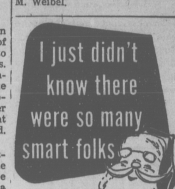

Miss Almira Bridwell was a special guest at the home of Henry Stott on his 92nd birthday. "Aunt Al" is one year older and they enjoyed talking and arguing over old times.

Surprise! how much smarter folks get when prices are high. Instead of buying tons of costly goods, more and more thoughtful shoppers are giving practical, useful, and durable. And the overwhelming majority in dollars is happy. Just for boys and men. . . Happy Jill for women & girls.
